THE J. E. JONES LETTER

OUTLAWING CONGRESS

The decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia that the question of the existence of the Senate Committee known as the "Reed Slush Fund Committee" must be decided by the Senate and not by the courts is regarded in Washington as good law and excellent common sense. The Senate and the House of Representatives have transacted lots of business through committees during the intermissions of Congress in past years. The custom has been so well established and so much in the interest of the public that it does not need to be defended.

It has been very convenient for politicians such as they have in Pennsylvania and Illinois to seek to defeat an investigation on the ground that a committee of Congress was proceeding improperly during a recess, or between sessions.

This sort of filibustering for the purpose of outlawing Congress was originated when Fall, Doheny and Sinclair were being "bumped off" in Senate hearings.

The obstructionists have gained a little time by their methods, but the chances are that they will "pay for their goins' a little later on. When Congress meets it will promptly and definitely define the authority of its committees, and behead all such obstructive schemers as who try to slow down the machinery of Government.

UNFAIR BUSINESS

The Federal Trade Commission has recently put a crimp in a lot of methods of unfair business.

A Chicago firm that has been misbranding and selling and advertising A. C. Spark Plugs is defending itself in hearings now being held.

The use of the term "Philippine Mahogany" in selling and advertising hardwoods that are not from the pure mahogany tree has been forbidden. One of the companies complained against is making a test case and will take it to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Certain American manufacturers who label and sell their homemade products and brand them as made in England will have to stop the practice.

The Royal Baking Powder Company and the Calumet Baking Powder Company are still being investigated as to their trade methods. It is a continuation of their quarrel which has lasted more than a decade.

A certain class of tailors who solicit orders for clothing purporting to come from their "mills" have been ordered to "cease and desist." Rug merchants who are perpetrating the same stunt by purporting to sell "direct from our looms to your rooms at 40 per cent saving" must cut out the bunk!

COOLIDGE'S CHOICE

President Coolidge apparently intended a classic political expression when he declared last Summer that he did not "choose to run for President in 1928." And now he has added another cryptic phrase that matches it pretty well. In reply to questioners as to what he would do after he left the White House he has replied, Vermont style, "Well, for a year or two I may whittle."

Usually a man who whittles "thinks" hard at the same time. There is likely that few countrymen will occasionally hear from Mr. Coolidge when he becomes an ex-president.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Mrs. Rodrick Harthorne of Bethel is in a very critical condition at the C. M. G. Hospital, Lewiston, and Harry McQuade of Melrose, Mass., is recovering from wounds at the home of Dr. Kay at West Paris, caused when two cars crashed together at South Woodstock, Wednesday.

The accident happened when a Massachusetts car attempted to pass a loaded team on a curve and crashed into a car driven by William Mason of South Bethel. Mr. Mason was returning from Lewiston where he had been called by the death of his wife. When he arrived at South Paris, Mrs. Harthorne and her father joined him to come to South Bethel for a visit.

The Massachusetts car containing three men was traveling at a fast rate of speed and the driver could not stop the car in time to avert the accident.

The injured were taken to the office of Dr. Kay at West Paris. Dr. Raymond, medical examiner, of South Paris was called and after an examination Mrs. Harthorne was taken to the C. M. G. Hospital and Mr. McQuade to the home of Dr. Kay.

The driver of the car, Harry Stuart, of Melrose, Mass., was arrested for reckless driving and paid a fine of $20 and costs.

MRS. WILLIAM MASON

Mrs. Bessie Mason, wife of William Mason of South Bethel, passed away Wednesday at the C. M. G. Hospital.

Mrs. Mason was the daughter of Claude Collins of Upton, Me.

She is survived by her husband, two children, father and a sister.

[illegible] ject of taxation is being threshed out in an intelligent manner and those who have been appearing before the Congress Committee have brought out the various viewpoints in which they are particularly interested. The open hearings and the frank discussions are in splendid contrast to the old gum-shoe methods when machine politicians and professional lobbyists attempted to get what they wanted out of Congress through private conferences in hotel bedrooms, or by the processes of wining and dining.

Politics has lost considerable glamor, but the big game in Washington has reached the point where every political question is being fought out in the open.

WASHOUT OF OLD LINE

Apparently parts must have been thrown away and the best policy possible is aimed at by Congress for meeting the demands for direct control. At the present stage of proceedings there seems to be a difference of opinion between the Republican and Democratic on the question, and in the language of Representative Frear, Republican, of Wisconsin "the dead line is about away the Mason and Dixon line."

EUGENE A. DESCOTEAU IS HELD

Norway Letter Carrier Charged with Big Theft from Post Office

Eugene A. Descoteau, a carrier on the city delivery from the Norway post office, was taken to Portland Wednesday night by two post office inspectors, charged with robbery from the Norway post office. Before United States Commissioner Gould Descoteau pleaded not guilty and waived hearing. Probable cause was therefore automatically found, and he was bound over in the sum of $1500 to the December term of United States court. Bail was furnished.

It is understood that the inspectors have in their possession a signed document by Descoteau, and that this statement is practically a confession. The larceny charged is that of two registered parcels from the Norway National Bank to the Federal Reserve Bank in Boston, which had been placed in the safe, from which Descoteau abstracted them. These two parcels are said to have contained about $1700 in currency, and $800 in bonds and coupons or other securities.

None of the property has been recovered, and it is alleged that Descoteau became panic stricken and destroyed the papers so that they would not be evidence against him.

Descoteau is 30 years of age and married.

DAYS OF THANKS FOR GOD'S MERCY ENGLISH CUSTOM

Ours by Adoption

Made a Stated Instead of Special Day Is Only Change That Has Taken Place.

Thanksgiving day, like most of what we have, is not our own being English in its origin and receiving merely new significance from its adoption. Englishmen have always followed the custom of setting aside days to recommemorate public blessings. The discovery of the Gunpowder plot was marked so and, similarly, special events have been marked. We have made it a stated instead of a special day and that is all of the American character that it has, and it was no until New England had been settled eighty years that it became a stated day, and there it was a stated, annual day for a long, long time before it obtained national adoption in any shape.

The first public thanksgiving observed by the Plymouth colony was in the autumn of 1623. A long drought was met by a day of fasting and prayer. The drought ended, abundant rains came, good crops followed and the Puritans remembered the event in a thanksgiving day. Oliver Cromwell's victories they similarly marked. From that time until the union with the Massachusetts Bay colony in 1691 seven thanksgiving days were observed.

First Thanksgiving.

The Massachusetts Bay colony kept its first thanksgiving day as soon as the last of Governor Winthrop's ships arrived in Boston harbor. "So now" says the chronicler, "all the whole fleet being safely come to their port they held a public day of thanksgiving, July 8, 1630 to give thanks to Almighty God for all His goodness and wonderful works which they had seen on the voyage." Here was the old English custom of thanksgiving for a special thing. Nearly every year after that a similar public day of thanks was observed in this colony for some special thing. In 1633 it was for "bountiful harvests and a great outcast of persons of special use and quality."

Since then the annual thanksgiving has been current in all New England and the clergy with rumored wife that have imparted the occasion to "eat to their vast" outnights which the Boston season would not admit of. It is not a question of New England Thanksgiving day sermons although admittedly would be a complete tale and connection of the social and political questions that have entered strongly for the last few centuries.

When Dutch Gave Thanks.

But how England did not escape the epidemic. The Dutch in New York gave public thanks on extraordinary occasions and the journals of the Continental congress show eight appointments by that body of thanksgiving days, recommending to the executives of the various colonies the observance, and with one exception the congress suspended on the thanksgiving days that it had appointed.

The Protestant Episcopal prayer book, ratified in 1789, appoints the first Thursday of November as a thanksgiving day unless another day shall be appointed by the civil authorities, and it was frequently observed in New York before the civil authorities fell into the custom of appointing similar days. On several occasions bishops of the Episcopal and of the Roman Catholic church have issued letters recommending the observance of such a day and prescribing forms. The plenary council of the latter church at Baltimore, in 1885, recommended that the observance of the day be regarded as a church feast, but nothing further has since been done concerning it and it stands here simply as a civil observance.

Thomas Jefferson's Attitude.

George Washington issued thanksgiving proclamations twice and during John Adams' administration two also were issued. Jefferson would have none of them. In a letter to Rev. Mr. Miller, in 1808, after setting out that the national government was

Thanksgiving

For peaceful vales that lie between
The hills bathed in unclouded light;
For harvests with their golden sheen,
The earth's increase that greets the sight;
We thank Thee, Giver of every true
And perfect gift that fills our days;
Our vows to Thee we now renew,
And lift the voice in tuneful praise

But let not too much thought of self
Obscure and hide the ones in need,
In other lands where pride and pelf
Are placed above the kindly deed,
We thank Thee for the generous store;
The fruited bough, the golden grain;
Nor shall the stranger at our door
Knock in distress and all in vain!

—Alanso Rice.

interdicted by the Constitution from intermeddling with religious institutions not only because of the great plan for the free exercise of religion but also because of the powers reserved to the states, with which, or with any human authority, count rests religious discipline, he says:

"But is it only proposed that I should recommend, not prescribe, a day of fasting and prayer. That is all or I should indirectly assume to the United States an authority over religious exercises which the Constitution has directly prohibited them. It must be meant, too, that this recommendation is to carry some authority, and to be conformed by some penalty on those who disregard it, not indeed of fine and imprisonment, but of some degree of persecution, perhaps in public opinion. And does the change in the nature of the penalty make the recommendation less a law of conduct for those to whom it is directed? I do not believe it is for the interest of religion to invite the civil magistrate to direct its exercises, its disciplines or its doctrines, nor of the religious societies that the general government should be invested with the power of effecting any uniformity of time or matter among them. Fasting and prayer are religious exercises, the enjoining them an act of discipline. Every religious society has a right to determine for itself the times for these exercises, and the objects proper, for them according to their particular tenets, and the right can never be safer in their own hands, where the Constitution has placed it."

Colonial Heritage.

But the observance of the day came as an old New England and New York custom, a Colonial heritage. Lincoln appointed November 20, 1863 as a day of national thanksgiving. That was at a time when Gettysburg had been won and Vicksburg had fallen. Before the appointed day came the Southern forces had been flanked on Lookout mountain and Missionary ridge, and Bragg's army was retreating. So with the North that year the thanks of the day had the fervor of praise to the God of battles as well as to the Giver of good.

We have kept pace with the custom since and it has become a day of feasting and less of fast; a day of devotion to pleasure and rest, though without a day of thanksgiving marked by sacred church attendance and more or less quiet hours.

Lesson in Observance of Thanksgiving Day

Thanksgiving day is an American institution. It has come down to us from the sturdy pioneers who on their stern and rock-bound coast found so much even in their lives of privation and hardship to be grateful for, that they set aside this day each year for the offering up of thanks for the blessings that Providence had bestowed.

Through these centuries the custom has been observed, and that very fact reveals a characteristic of the American people. Thanksgiving day is essentially and primarily a day of worship, for to offer thanks to God for His goodness is one of the most noble forms of worship.

The observance of Thanksgiving is an acknowledgment that there is a higher power playing a part in directing the lives and fortunes of men here.

Our Thanksgiving is therefore a recognition of dependence upon one greater than our selves, and the contemplation of such dependence can but work toward making us more unselfish, more generous, more charitable toward our fellow men.—Houston Post-Dispatch.

The Thankful Heart

If anyone should give me a dish of sand, and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my eyes and search for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to detect them; but let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and how it would draw to itself the almost invisible particles by the mere power of attraction. The unthankful heart, like my fingers in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find in every hour some heavenly blessings—only the iron in God's sand is gold.—Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes

The Story of the Comeback of a Woman Gone to Seed

By Mary Culbertson Miller

INSTALLMENT IV

Diagnosis of Face Skin.

THE strong light from the window brought out the rough blotchiness of the woman's skin. Miss Whyte flicked over a leaf of a record book before her and wrote swiftly for several minutes. Then she said, "The skin, Mrs. Crane, is a woman's chief single beauty when it is of delicate tint and texture. It acts as a barometer of inward health and physical purity."

"Shall we take it first, Miss Whyte?" Helen's voice vibrated with emotion. The thrill of the chase was in her blood.

"Yes, we've diagnosed you thoroughly, and we're ready to begin work. You never had a facial before, did you?"

"No. I've never given myself any attention other than to be clean."

"That reminds me, I want to speak about your bathing today."

Bathing.

"It seems indeed a simple procedure. But the whys and wherefores of that simple matter have not concerned you, I'll wager. Did it ever occur to you, Mrs. Crane, that the body breathes through the skin, and if the pores are stopped up the body suffocates? The poisons remain in the blood supply and are distributed over and over again to the other parts of the body, interfering with their efficiency, and endangering the health of the whole mechanism."

Helen shook a negative head.

"Many rough and blotchy complexions," Miss Whyte went on, "are visible results of body uncleanliness; yet imagine how indignant the owner of such a skin would be if she were bodily accused of being unclean!

"Not the prettiest face in the city can disperse the emotion aroused by the least suspicion of uncleanliness. Now since you are accustomed to taking a warm bath at night I would continue it. It should be between 92 and 100 degrees Fahrenheit. That temperature is decidedly more beneficial in all its aspects. Millions of tiny pores are constantly draining off the waste matter of the body and skin. The warm bath removes this poisonous material from the skin surface as well as soothes jumping nerves, takes away that tired feeling that persists from an exhausting day, induces sleep, and relieves the stiffness in overworked joints and muscles."

"It seems almost providential that I decided upon some one like you, Miss Whyte."

Cold Dip Advised.

"There are others of my ilk, my dear lady," said Miss Whyte modestly. "Looking up from Doctor Johnston's letter she went on, "Your physician would like you to experiment with a cold dip in the morning. He states that your entire system needs to be waked up from its sluggishness. Just slip in and out. Then rub vigorously with a big rough towel until your skin glows and every inch tingles with a delightful feeling. But if you do not have that joyous feeling, but in place you feel cold and unhappy—discontinue it—it is not for you.

"You must always look after your feet, for that walk every day is compulsory. Later its length will be regulated to fit in with other exercises. When you return from your walk give your feet a warm bath. The idea is to keep constantly removing the waste matters deposited on the skin by the pores. If you have corns I want you to go to a chiropodist. We'll talk again about that."

"You are a wizard, Miss Whyte, I believe."

"No wizardry about it. I just experimented and studied, and the result is that I know how to protect and conserve a woman's physical charms by assisting nature in warding the raids of ill-health or age." The beauty specialist's gaze had fastened on Helen's hair. "That will be a problem she thought. It was obvious it had been a sunny shade of brown once with golden glints. But long since those glints had fled. It was a tousled mass, bits of hair stuck through a net. "It's of that exasperating length, isn't it," she said, fingering the fine brown tails. "Well, in a day or two you'll have a shingle; then I think I'd better call a hairdresser. She will tell us how to arrange it becomingly."

Love and Lilacs Are Irrevocably Related

If as many lilac petals as composed the name of a lover were strung on triple threads of white silk and worn in a little bag next to the heart, before next lilac time came the lover would be won by this secret charm. If you have lilac in your garden no ghost can enter your house; if white lilac grows beside your door you will never be without love and luck; if you pluck a spray of lilac without your lover's knowledge, when walking with him, put one of its petals in his drink; if he swallows it, he is yours forever and a day.

A "luck lilac," usually found on white lilac, has five divisions of the petal instead of four. If you are in love, look for a luck lilac, swallow it, and your loved one will be faithful for all time! Thus love and lilac are irrevocably related.

Great Emotional Role Long Without Friends

The role that is now considered by most actresses to be the world's greatest emotional part—Camille—once went begging for some one to play it, points out a noted actress in an article in Liberty. "When it was first written the part was refused by every actress in Paris," the writer explains. "Then, after it had gone begging for months, it was picked up and played by Madame Eugenie Doche, who needed a part very badly because she had been ill and off the stage for a long time. So Madame Doche goes down in history as the first to play Camille.

"Since then," the writer continues, "it is probably true that Camille has been played by more and greater actresses than any other role in the world. It was the part that won Sarah Bernhardt her first universal praise. Eleanora Duse played the part to cheers and tears, although quite differently. And there were so many others—Helena Modjeska, Clara Morris, Rejane, Fanny Davenport, Nazee O'Neill, Olga Nethersole, Margaret Anglin, Ethel Barrymore. No wonder that Camille has been called the world's greatest emotional role."

"Secular" Music

The Latin word from which this term is taken simply means "age," as when we speak of something going on "from age to age." In this way it applies only to the world and to worldly things. Thus in one church a secular priest signifies one performing his functions while still living in the world, as opposed to the monastic priest, who is cut off from it.

Secular music, then, is the ordinary music of the ordinary world, its opposite being sacred or church music.

Children's Bedtime Story

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

Alice wanted so much to hear a story about icicle castles, and surely everyone can understand this for nothing is any more beautiful than an icicle castle.

It had been cold that day, and Alice had come indoors early in the afternoon.

She had had some lessons to learn and the fire in the stove seemed so lovely and warm.

When she went to bed that night she saw all the wonderful paintings made on her window by the icicle artists.

Such beautiful designs and pictures. She could make out, too, just where there was a castle.

It did seem very fine to have a castle on her very own window!

Not much after this she was in bed with the big red comfortable tucked around her shoulders and under her chin.

She was as warm as could be.

She could hear the crackling noise the snow and ice made outside.

It was a very still night, but very cold. Every sound could be heard so clearly.

The crackling noise seemed to be louder and louder after a little while and the creaking sounds she had heard in the hard snow seemed to come more often.

"Hello, Alice," said a voice. She lifted the red comfortable down a little, and half sat up in bed.

"Hello," said Alice, politely.

"I've come to take you for a little trip," the voice continued.

"I can't see you," said Alice.

"Well, well, well, I must come closer," said the voice. "You don't want to take a trip with any stranger of course but when you see who I am I feel sure you will want to come with me."

The creature came closer. He was dressed in an icicle costume and he looked like a big, fat, beautiful icicle himself.

"Who are you, do tell me," urged Alice. "To me you look exactly like an icicle."

"Then I look like myself," chuckled the creature, and as he chuckled a little cool wave of air swept over Alice.

"Are you an icicle?" asked Alice.

"Indeed I Am," Said the Creature.

"Indeed I am," said the creature.

"And what is your name?" asked Alice.

"My name is Icy Icicle, and I live at Icicle Headquarters."

"Where are they?" asked Alice.

"They're the headquarters for the Icicle family. Of course we all travel around and visit rocks and houses and trees and hillsides, but we have a very huge and magnificent icicle castle which we call Headquarters.

"There live the big icicles and the little icicles and the old icicles and the new icicles.

"When icicles are weary they come there for rest, when they aren't quite strong enough to go out they stay there, and when the icicles drop down because it is too warm or because they have fallen, they are picked up by little icicle workers and brought back to Headquarters so that they will get well.

"I've come to ask you if you'd like to pay Headquarters a visit."

"Oh, oh," said Alice, "I would love to more than anything."

So Icy Icicle and Alice went straight over to the window, right through the castle that had been painted upon the window.

On and on they went through groves and valleys and paths lined with icicle hangings.

At last they reached the Headquarters. Oh, such a castle as there was! It had turrets and towers and moats and great huge ballrooms and dining rooms and reception rooms and great halls in which hung pictures of famous icicle leaders.

Never had Alice seen such gorgeous icicles. They seemed to wear many jewels, too. And she was given a banquet of iced delicacies in the great icicle banquet hall.

And just before dawn began to creep over Headquarters Icy brought her back home, and tucked her in her own bed—and the strangest thing was that not once had she been cold!

By NELLIE MAXWELL

If you are short of jelly try making some of rhubarb. This is the time of year when the pectin is well developed in it and the jelly will thicken. Wash the stalks and cut it up without peeling—do not mind if it is stringy. To every pound of rhubarb add one-half cupful of water and let it stew in a granite dish until it is all in shreds. Let drip or strain through a cloth and allow measure for measure of sugar and juice. Cook until it thickens when tried on a cold plate. Remove the scum carefully and seal with paraffin as usual. This is especially good with meats in winter.

Spiced Grape Marmalade.—Remove the skins from a basket of grapes. Cook the pulp in three cupfuls of vinegar (mild), four sticks of cinnamon, one pound of cloves and two blades of mace tied in a cloth. Pass as much as possible through a sieve, keeping back the seeds. Add the skins which have been simmering slowly until tender, four pounds of sugar and cook until thick. Seal in glasses. This is especially good with venison.

Preserved Citron Melon.—Cut the melon into halves and then into sections to remove the seeds. Peel and cut into very small cubes—the more even and regular the prettier the preserve will be. This will take time but it is worth it for a jar of this preserve will be a joy all winter to garnish and flavor puddings and sauces. Weigh the fruit and allow a slightly less weight of sugar. Cook the citron in clear water to which a little salt is added, using the harder portions first, adding the rest, until all is perfectly tender. Now add the sugar and let stand off the stove, stirring until the sugar is all dissolved, then put over the heat and cook slowly until the fruit is heated through. Remove the fruit to jars, boil up the syrup until thick, then pour boiling hot over the citron. Some add thinly sliced lemon to the citron or the juice of a lemon with the grated rind. Others like crystallized ginger.

Chicken Salad.—Take a pint of diced cooked chicken, preferably the breast meat, add one cupful of finely diced tender celery, a cupful of tender white cabbage finely shredded and a handful of blanched and shredded almonds. Mix with a highly seasoned salad dressing and serve on head lettuce.

Banana Marmalade.—Use two pounds of bananas, two pounds of sugar and the juice of one lemon. Peel and slice the fruit, add the sugar and lemon juice and let stand in a crockery dish for an hour. Turn into a granite pan and cook gently until the mixture becomes thick, stirring constantly. Test by dropping a little on a cold plate. If it sets, remove from the heat and put into jars. Use this as filling for the marquise cake.

STORING BUTTER FOR WINTER

If the summer supply of butter in the farm home is larger than is used by the family and the winter supply is less than is desirable, it is sometimes convenient to store the summer surplus for use in winter. To insure good keeping qualities in butter the United States Department of Agriculture has found it best to use pasteurized sweet cream. The cream should be churned at a low temperature and the butter washed so that it will be firm and waxy.

It Is Not Economy to Let Shoes Run Down at the Heel

These Shoes Seemed Beyond Repair, but Were Made to Look Almost Like New.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Good care of shoes includes prompt repair. It is never true economy to wear down-at-the-heel, dilapidated shoes. Such shoes neither protect the feet nor properly support the body. What might be saved in leather may be paid eventually to foot specialists and doctors. The minute a seam begins to rip, the upper cracks through, a heel twists out of shape or runs down, or a hole wears through the outsole, the shoe needs mending. If the necessary bit of repairing is put off the sole may be so badly worn that it is no longer worth mending, and from $2 to $5 will be lost by neglect. This is particularly true if the welt is worn away or the insole is worn through.

Keep Heels Squared.

Heels should always be kept "squared up." When they begin to run down on one side both the shoes and the body are put under a strain. The shoes are soon permanently twisted out of their normal position and shape, and the feet, ankles, and legs may be twisted also. Unless the leather or rubber lift on wooden heels is promptly replaced when it wears away, the covering of the wooden part is cut through and may have to be replaced, sometimes an expensive job because of the difficulty in matching the material in the rest of the shoe.

Handy Repair Kit.

Ripped seams in the uppers can frequently be stitched at home. A handy person, with the aid of a repair kit, can put on new heel lifts, rubber heels, half soles, and metal heel or toe plates without much difficulty. The equipment necessary for repairing shoes includes a last holder, three or four iron lasts of different sizes, a shoemaker's hammer, a pair of pincers, one or two leather knives, a leather rasp or file, awls, nails for soles and heels, flax shoe thread, bristles, and wax. These articles or made-up repair kits are sold by dealers in hardware or shoe findings and by some mail-order houses.

The BABY

No mother in this enlightened age would give her baby something she did not know was perfectly harmless, especially when a few drops of plain Castoria will right a baby's stomach and end almost any little ill. Fretfulness and fever, too; it seems no time until everything is serene.

That's the beauty of Castoria; its gentle influence seems just what is needed. It does all that castor oil might accomplish, without shock to the system. Without the evil taste. It's delicious! Being purely vegetable, you can give it as often as there's a sign of colic; constipation; diarrhea; or need to aid sound, natural sleep.

Just one warning: It is genuine Fletcher's Castoria that physicians recommend. Other preparations may be just as free from all doubtful drugs, but no child of this writer's is going to test them! Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold.

Headwear for Winter Season

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

And now? Well, for one thing dazzling beautiful "real millinery," the sort that holds the promise of the mode for dressier headwear for the winter season.

So here they come, dinner and dance hats, hats for the fashion costume, queenly headdress for the opera, hats to add a brilliant touch to winter furs, or to top the velvet ensemble.

This very true, for street and sports wear, hats are still definitely simple. Many a felt hat, cuddled to the head, is proud in the distinction of being not trimmed, its intricate construction achieving almost chic.

When it comes to the hat for festive and "dress up" occasions—suppose, for want of adjectives equal to describing them, we let this illustration tell its own story? Perhaps the most important hat in this collection is the little gold embroidered and spangled metal cloth skullcap pictured last in the group. Metallic types of this cap-fitting sort are the "last word" in millinery.

Toques of all-over gold cloth similar to the model shown at the top of the picture are wearable with the day time velvet and fur costume.

Sumptuous gold and black brocade as fashioned into the charming toque to the left emphasizes the importance of "black and gold."

Plues of ostrich enrich the evening hat to the right—which reminds us novelty feature trimmings feature big throughout the millinery mode.

The youthful little hat to the left is styled of gold embroidered lace. Metal lace-wrapped toques, by the way, are among fashion's latest.

Oysters Valuable as Source of Minerals

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

You know, doubtless, that oysters are extremely valuable as a source of various minerals needed by the body. Like other fish they supply iodine, so should be eaten when possible if other sea foods are hard to get. Fresh oysters are now shipped in refrigerator cars all over the country, and canned oysters are also sold practically everywhere.

The secret of perfect fried oysters with an unbroken outer coating, says the bureau of home economics, is to let the oysters stand a while after dipping them in egg and bread crumbs so that the coating will harden. Select large oysters for single fryes. Drain them and look them over carefully for small pieces of shell. Have finely sifted stale bread crumbs seasoned with salt and pepper spread out on a platter. Dip the oysters first into a well beaten egg to which one tablespoonful of cold water has been added and roll them in the seasoned crumbs. Place the oysters on a pan or board and allow them to stand until the egg and bread coating has set.

Heat in an iron kettle any desired fat until hot enough to brown a bread crumb in 40 seconds. Then carefully place the oysters in a wire basket, lower them into the fat slowly, and cook until golden brown. As the oysters are removed, put them on a paper to absorb the excess fat, and keep warm until all are prepared.

JELLIED FRUIT PEEL IS NICE FOR GIFTS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Within two or three weeks of Christmas plan to make some jellied peel for gifts. Grapefruit peel will yield the largest and most attractive pieces, but orange and lemon peel may also be used. Each has, of course, its characteristic flavor, and after using the peel you have the pulp left to be served as breakfast fruit or in salad. With a pound or two of sugar and the use of the oven stove for an afternoon you can make any of these into a delicious confection. Keep a little on hand to use in place of citron in cakes, and to serve at holiday parties.

Making Jellied Grapefruit Peel

The method is the same with all three kinds of peel. Thick, soft, unblemished peel from smooth fruit is best, according to the bureau of home economics. Strip the peel from the fruit in even sections, including just as much of the white part as you can. Cut the peel into strips about a fourth or a half inch wide. Weigh it and allow two quarts of cold water for each ten ounces. Parboil the peel three times, half an hour each time, in this amount of water, to make it tender. Discard the water after each cooking. Handle the strips very gently at the last or you will break them.

The next step in the process consists of boiling the peel in a syrup until it is practically all absorbed. If you have ten ounces of peel, select a saucepan about eight inches in diameter, and put into it two cupfuls or fourteen ounces of granulated sugar, 1 1/3 cupfuls of water, and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Bring this to a boil, and when the sugar is dissolved lay the strips parallel to each other in the saucepan, so they can be turned easily. Boil them rapidly for twenty minutes, then reduce the heat. Toward the end of the cooking the strips must be carefully turned from time to time, so that the syrup penetrates each piece equally. Cook until the syrup is all absorbed, from forty to sixty minutes or longer. Watch the pan constantly to prevent scorching.

Lift the strips out on waxed paper and cool. Roll in granulated sugar until there is a coating of distinct crystals, but not a heavy crust. Dry out for a few hours, then wrap in waxed paper and store in tightly covered tin or glass containers. If you leave the peel in paper boxes it tends to become hard and crusty in winter and sticky in summer. If properly stored in a moderately cool place it should keep in good condition two or three weeks.

FINDS FRIENDLY TOWARD U. S. IN GERMANY

Bethel people will be interested in the following article taken from the Portland Sunday Telegram. Mr. Clough is a graduate of Gould Academy and has many friends in town.

Following a recent novel experience of deck hand on a United States Shipping Board steamer, Taylor Danforth Clough of Malden, Mass., a senior at Bates College, brings back first hand information as to present conditions in Germany and other European countries and a message of good will and of a friendliness towards America by the German common people.

This was young Clough's second trip across as a "sailor", his first being a year ago, when a desire to travel, and also the wish to earn money during his college vacation led him to sign up for a voyage on a U. S. Shipping Board vessel. His experience was so satisfactory, that this year he again shipped for a round trip on the same freighter bound for Hamburg and Bremen. The wages were fair, an able bodied seaman receiving $62.50 a month and his "keep", the food and quarters being "not too bad," he said. The trips going and returning were uneventful, the trip over requiring 13 days and the return voyage 12 days. Icebergs were encountered both ways, but none to the detriment of the voyage and on the return trip the ship was wirelessed to keep a watch for the overdue aviators.

While the days on the water were experiences in themselves that made a strong impression upon young Clough, it was the six days of travel while ashore at Bremen that gave him the greatest pleasure.

By special arrangement with the ship's officers, Clough was provided with a substitute at Hamburg, which left him free to spend all of his time after the ship reached Bremen, and he returns with a report that only a friendly feeling towards America and Americans so far as he came in contact with the common people, exists in Germany. There is no animosity. Many of the men who were in the late war declared that a great majority of the boys in the German army had no heart to fight. ## MAINE POTATOES FORECAST AT 32,148,000 BUSHELS

[illegible] November 1, the Maine potato crop is forecast at 32,148,000 bushels. This is 2,000,000 bushels more than was harvested last year and 1,000,000 bushels more than the average of the last five years.

The Maine commercial apple crop is forecast at 2,500,000 barrels, compared with 2,168,000 barrels harvested last year.

October weather was unusually favorable for the maturing and harvesting of crops in Maine as well as in other New England States. With a reported average yield of 44 bushels per acre the Maine corn crop is reported to be about equal to the average of the past five years. Buckwheat and white beans appeared to be somewhat better than average.

Practically all late maturing crops throughout the United States were helped by favorable October weather. Frosts and freezes were delayed beyond their usual date in most cases, greatly aiding in maturing crops. The crop of principal crops, while [illegible] are expected to be 2.4 per cent above the average of yields during the last five years.

UNITED STATES COMMERCIAL APPLES 24,060,000 BARRELS

The outlook for commercial apples in the United States declined slightly during October. The crop on November 1 is estimated at 24,060,000 barrels, compared with 24,350,000 barrels the estimate a month ago. These estimates compare with 20,411,000 barrels harvested in 1926 and 34,710,000 barrels, the five year average 1922-1926. New York, Virginia and Washington are the only states showing a decline from the forecasting of October 1.

In New England the crop is estimated at 1,750,000 barrels, compared with 2,168,000 barrels harvested last year and 2,500,000 barrels, the five year average. In New England New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Missouri, the only [illegible] Large. The crop of late winter apples in the United States is estimated at 110,332,000 bushels, [illegible] half of last year's large crop.

"ROAD COURTESY"

Although the spark of "Road Courtesy" may lately seem to have been entirely extinguished, it begins to look as though all it needed was a little coaxing in the form of a reminder. The increasing number of cars and trucks displaying the little blue and white notice which reads: "THIS DRIVER WILL MEET ALL OTHER GENTLEMEN HALF WAY ON ANY TRAFFIC SITUATION" is ample proof that the motoring public as a whole is at heart not only willing, but eager to follow a co-operative suggestion.

Inquiry reveals that the little gummed strips referred to above, can be had gratis by addressing the Advertising Department of Mack Trucks Inc., 352 W. 44th St., New York City. An official of the company informs us that the "Gentlemen's Agreement" idea has met with an almost startling response from the motoring public. The company promises however, to keep up with the demand by supplying them in any reasonable amount.

We went downstairs and out of the house in silence, and as we moved down the path we were instantly challenged by Mallory, who came running up to us.

"Where's Wilkins," he asked. "What have you done with him?"

"Lost him," said Ashton sourly.

"But he can't have got out of the house," protested Mallory. "I'm sure nobody has got out of the house."

"We've lost him, I tell you," said Ashton. "Can't you understand plain English?"

We all halted just then, and started, a little expectant. A man's footsteps were approaching, and the next moment he halted, rather undecidedly, at the front gate. But seeing us, he turned in and came promptly toward us.

"Where's the car, gentleman?" he asked. "What have you done with the car?"

"What's that?" Ashton roared.

"The car—the automobile that I drove you out in! Where is it?"

For a moment there was no answer to that but silence. But the silence and the dismayed astonishment on our faces, gave the man his answer.

"So you went to the fire, did you?" said the chauffeur grimly.

"Not for more than five minutes," the man protested. "I thought I'd see if I could be of any help—"

The man's explanation trailed off wildly—protesting, incoherent, but we paid very little attention to it. We knew what had happened, all too well.

"Well," said the doctor, "if Wilkins only appreciated the fact, he owes us a large debt of gratitude. We told him about the map; and then we brought the girl out to him, and left her, together with an automobile for him to disappear in."

"He's better not try to thank me," said Ashton grimly, "until the score is settled. I'll get him yet."

"No," said the doctor, "I don't believe you will. Wilkins is playing in luck, perfectly concerted good luck. And when you combine luck with the more solid and reliable qualities which Wilkins possesses, you get a result that is almost sure to be successful."

Ashton turned away impatiently.

"But the car!" the chauffeur cried. "I'm responsible for it. What am I to do?"

Ashton told him what he might do, in three or four short, explosive words.

CHAPTER XI

The doctor's prediction regarding the escape of Wilkins and the girl came true. It was all of twenty-four hours before the wires were working again, and the search, which could not fairly begin until that time, proved absolutely futile. The automobile was found next day, very early in the morning, standing in front of the Western station, the very place where we had started in it on our ride to Oak Ridge. But the oddly assorted pair, who must have driven back to town in it that night, disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed them up.

It was a long while before Ashton would admit the probability, or even the possibility, that he had lost them. Their escape must have rankled, for he never, voluntarily, spoke of the Oak Ridge affair, and he treated all references to it, however indirect, in a manner which did not encourage the speed.

I think that, in his heart, Doctor McAlister found it impossible to be sorry that Wilkins had got off. It is one thing to know, as a matter of fact, that a man is a knave and that he richly deserves to be hung, but it is another thing to wish earnestly, for such a consummation. He had liked Wilkins, and the strange, romantic experiences regarding his past, which the doctor's excellent instruments had betrayed to us were not strong enough to change that liking.

When we regained town, in our disappointment over the affair, we had first-hand knowledge of it. One thing certain about it all seemed to be that we should never know.

But in that conclusion, although we were wrong, only a few days sufficed to show us. Only a few weeks came the secret I have here recorded, and took place the letter which came into my office waiting a letter.

"Look at the handwriting first," he said, "and see if you can guess who it's from."

I took the thing in my hand, and glanced over it for a moment in considerable perplexity. It was familiar, at least as familiar as my own, and yet I could not place it.

But as I gazed, some vague suggestion of definite French pedigree and connection came into my mind. I started and dragged the letter to my desk.

"Not—not Wilkins!" I cried.

The doctor smiled broadly. "Read what he's got to say."

I needed no second invitation "Doctor McAlister,

"Respected Sir: I have long intended to write to you to tell you how Jane Perkins and I are getting along, thinking you might be interested. I have taken up the white man's burden, as the poet says, and I find that it takes up most of my time, even though this island of mine is small (About ten square miles) and the population not numerous.

"Perkins and I (or Fanenna as she is called by her own people) are married and living very happy. Now that I am, in a sort, king here—trusting that you will pardon the liberty, sir—and obliged to make all the laws as well as enforce them, I am filled with regret for my former irregularities, though I may say that they have turned out well in the end.

"I did not murder Henry Morgan. Fanenna did, although she does not know it, and I would not tell her so for worlds. Perhaps I had better tell my story in order.

"Morgan was a villain and he deserved exactly what he got—If I may be allowed that opinion, sir. Circumstances may have justified him in killing Captain Franklin; indeed, there is no doubt that it had to be one or the other of them; and in robbing him of his money and his map, he only did what others, perhaps, would have done in his place. But he did an inexcusable thing, when he lodged an information with the authorities against the rest of us. The act was not necessary to his escape, for he could have got off scotfree anyway. But he wanted Franklin's treasure all to himself, and he thought if he could get us all hanged there would be none to dispute it with him. I found out in time what he had done, and I escaped; but the other poor fellows were caught and paid the penalty of their faith in a traitor.

"I went to America, but not in pursuit of Morgan. I did not know that he had gone there, and I wanted nothing more to do with him anyway, as I had decided to settle down and lead a respectable life. It pays just as well as the other and it's much more comfortable. This may surprise you, but it's true—I do not refer to the tips I earned as head waiter at The Meredith. That was not my trade so much as it was my recreation. In my youth I made the acquaintance of a palm reader and spiritualist, and this was the profession I took upon coming to your city. It was not long before I was able to organize this industry and to hire others to do the actual work. I supervised it all, and as head waiter at The Meredith, I was able to learn much about our smart people, which could be told to them again by palmists and mediums, with very good effect.

"It was in this connection that I became acquainted with Jane Perkins. A medium I employed, whose apartment was not far from The Meredith, discovered her, and was using her figure stories very effectively as a lecture. I got the greatest surprise of my life the first time I ever heard her talking Maori, a language which I understand and speak, as I suspect that you do also. From her talk I discovered that she was my old captain's daughter, and that she had inherited the secret. This was coming rather too close to home for comfort, as you will well understand, so I took her out of the spiritualist business, much as I regretted to do so, for she was very salable, and got her employed as chambermaid at The Meredith.

"We were out walking together one day when her subjective state came over her without warning. She darted ahead of me, and I saw that she was making some one through the streets, by the scent. I followed her. Luckily it was dark, and we were not noticed. She traveled very fast and overtook the person she was following, just as he was entering the Western station. I caught one look at him and saw that he was Henry Morgan.

"I succeeded in rousing her out of her state, for I did not want anything to happen just then and there. But I was determined to find where he lived and to get his crap away from him if it did him no good, as there was neither latitude and longitude carried upon it, and this was the secret which Fanenna had told me.

"On the night when the unfortunate incident occurred which caused you and Mr. Ashton to interest yourselves in the case, we had gone out to Oak Ridge to make an attempt to secure the map. Nothing more than that, I assure you, sir. I had hypnotized her in order that she might lead me, by means of her extraordinary sense of smell, to the house where he lived, but she ran on ahead too fast for me to follow her. The crime was already committed, if you can call it a crime, before I reached the house.

"I tried to get her to go home with me, making no attempt to find the map at that time, but she was greatly excited and dangerous. So I was obliged to go away without her. I was unable to find her from that time, until she came back to The Meredith of her own accord, the day after she made her second visit to the Morgan house at the time when you were there.

"It was during my absence from the hotel, and without my knowledge, that she answered the advertisement for the cloak, indeed. I did not know that she had done so, until you spoke to me concerning it that night at dinner. At that time it seemed safer to permit you to make the examination which you wished to make, than to try to prevent the examination from taking place, for she was now Jane Perkins, perfectly ignorant of everything connected with the affair.

"How you found out her true connection with it, as well as mine, I have no idea. I did not know you had done so, until I tore open the envelope in the hall and found it empty. Then I knew that it was time to act.

"There is one thing more, before I close, which you may think wants an explanation. I said just now that Fanenna did not know that she had killed old Morgan, and yet she is Fanenna rather than Jane Perkins, although she is not exactly either one of them. She is no longer subject to those trance states of hers, and her character seems to be a mixture of the two distinct persons which she was before that night when you took her out to Oak Ridge with you. Her memories of all her past are, I am thankful to say, extremely vague, though she remembers some things out of both of them. She can talk both Maori and English as well as I, and she says it is because when she was a Maori girl she heard a voice speaking to her in English, and ordering her to understand it. This seems great nonsense to me, but it may be that you will see some meaning in it.

"I will close by saying that the map which I found in old Morgan's house that night was worth all the trouble it cost me to get it, for it has made us very comfortable and well-to-do, and has made it possible for me to make many improvements on this island of mine. It is a very beautiful place, and with the comforts of civilization, which I have been able to add to its natural attractions, is a very good place to live.

"Fanenna wishes to be remembered to you and Mr. Phelps, and also to Mr. Ashton, whom she used to admire very greatly when she was chambermaid at The Meredith.

"I should enjoy a visit from you very much, but I fear it will be impossible, for reasons which you will doubtless understand, for me even to suggest such a thing. But please believe me, sir,

"Yours most gratefully and respectfully,

"WILKINS,
"Iloma Island.

"P. S. You have seen a map of this island, or a part of it, and above is the name I have given it; but I must imitate the wisdom and discretion of my old chief, and omit to mention latitude and longitude."

The doctor met my eye as I laid the paper down. "You don't happen to know the latitude and longitude, do you, Phelps?" he asked, laughing.

"Do you?" I exclaimed, with a rather startled look into his twinkling gray eyes.

"Do you remember those queer syllables that Fanenna repeated to us that night when she told us her story the syllables that neither she nor I understood?"

Then, mimicking her strange guttural voice (and I will admit that even now the mere sound of it made me shiver a little), he said, "Onan reef, t ones. Ten sout."

Over and over he repeated them, his smile growing broader and more tantalizing, as I still failed to understand. Then, all at once, I got it.

"One fifty west. Ten south!" shouted.

"Not so loud," he said in mock alarm. "Ashton might hear you. And, on the whole," he added, smiling thoughtfully, but still half-serious "on the whole, I'd rather Ashton didn know."

"You can show him the letter, a any rate," said I.

There came a knock at the door ju then, a knock we knew.

"Come in," called the doctor. "Co in, Ashton. Here's a letter that m interest you."

(THE END.)

Settle Old Dispute in Ring

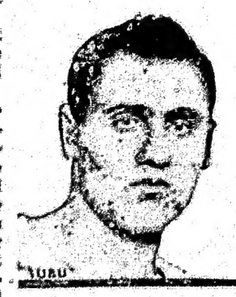
PHIL SCOTT, the angular, elongated champion of England, while training for his Paolino Uzcudun fight, said he would knock the "ed off 'im."

Through his board of managers Paolino promised to send the ambitious Britisher back to his little fireman's hat in gray old London.

"The senor knock heem out two years ago in Spain, so ver-ry ezz-zy, you understan'," the board explains triumphantly.

To which Scott replies that he was "butted in the bloomin' belly, and not really knocked out at all, don't y'know."



Phil Scott.

And so, radio fans, you will listen in on an international "grudge fight"—as the ezy-ezzing goes.

Scott claims he has chased the woodchopper all over Europe in an effort to engage him in fisticuffs that Descamps was at the time of the Georges Carpentier fight though both admitted he had claimed, they said, that Descamps was not disqualify the champion. Paolino had claims, they said, not disqualify the and therefore would have him jolly well whipped, when 'e came at me with his bloomin' 'ed." Basque. "Strike me pink," the modest Briton continued, "if I didn't

Captain Small in Size, but a Giant in Power

That old crack about the size of the package not telling the quality certainly holds true in the case of Martin Gentry, Arizona's football captain this year.

Gentry is the smallest regular on the team, yet he is the mightiest.

He only weighs 160 pounds in playing condition, but plays center in such a manner that he is considered one of the best middle men in that section.

This is his last year as a member of the Wildcats, and his play so far gives indication of being his best.

He has worked his way through school, doing odd jobs around the town where jobs for collegians are rather scarce, and hopes to be a lawyer when he graduates.

Christy Mathewson Mark Still Best in Classic

Of the seven pitchers who won three games in one world series the record of Christy Mathewson pitching for Giants in 1905, is first.

Mathewson did not permit a run in three games. Only 92 men faced him. He struck out 18 and gave only one base on balls.

Following are records of pitchers who won three world series contests in one year:

The Marquette squad attracted widespread attention and comment while wearing the coats on their recent trip to West Point to play the Army.

Drew Line on Pipes

There is a sign in a favorite cafe of the boulevard St. Michel, Paris, in the heart of the student quarter, which reads: "Ladies are requested not to smoke pipes." It was posted after an irate waiter routed two girl students who chose a corner table in the sun as a pleasant place to smoke their briar pipes and to philosophize on the latest gossip of the Latin quarter.

Severe Head Colds and Sinus Trouble

THE MOST ANNOYING OF ALL AILMENTS

Any stuffy nose from a cold that does not clear up in a few days produces Sinus trouble. Some Sinuses are large cavities in the nose, others are small (like honeycomb), and when a cold gets into them it causes pain, or pressure in the eye balls, sore eyes, in temples, and back of head, fullness in ear, and mucus dropping in throat. This leads to a tickling cough, sore throat, head noises, and catarrhal deafness, due to improper drainage. To clear this up vaporize CAMPHOROLE, and inhale according to directions.

CAMPHOROLE opens up the nose, and gets into the sinuses, killing the germs that multiply by millions in those stuffy cavities, reduces the inflamed swollen mucous membranes, and gives good drainage to the discharge. This is what every specialist tries to obtain in order to get results. It is impossible for germs to live in the camphor vapors produced by CAMPHOROLE. Keep a jar handy and use at the first sign of a cold.

What to Give at Christmas Time

Dainty New Flower Aprons

If the Christmas program is to be carried out according to tradition there will be the usual exchange of gift aprons. Happy the recipient of one of the new flower aprons! They are made of organdie in realistic flower colorings and patternings. You buy them stamped ready to embroider. The one in the picture has green organdie for its foundation, also for the huge leaves which form the bib. The apron is cut in the form of a pansy using purple and orchid organdie. The two center petals serve as pockets. There is narrow lace edging here and there. Wild rose designs done in pink and green are lovely.

Holds a Ball of Cord

It would seem as if most everybody would appreciate as a Christmas gift a Handy Andy who would hold guard over a ball of cord, keeping it ever ready for use, like the little pasteboard-faced elf in this picture is doing. No, the spiral neck and spindling legs of this little sprite aren't just for "looks"; they form the axis on which the ball of cord revolves. The flower petal skirt? Oh, just a way of "dolling up" the trinket so that it is "ornamental as well as useful." The figure stands on a box which holds rubber bands, tags thumb tacks and other needed articles.

An Attractive Sewing Box

The mission of this little lady and more of her kind is to enter many a household on or about December 25 bearing a message of "Merry Christmas" from someone to someone. Lift her bouffant skirts made of decorative crepe paper and you will find that she is a very dainty bisque doll wired to a handy box just large enough to hold wee scissors, needles, thread, a thimble and such—a pretty gift, inexpensive and easy to make.

Flower Basket Book Ends

If you are losing sleep nights trying to "think up" the daintiest and loveliest of Christmas gifts for some winsome debutante or bride, here it is—flower-basket book ends. They are all that esthetic femininity might wish for. Confined of gold lace, stretched over colorful satin-covered basket forms they are as substantial and practical as if of heavy bronze. Those pretty poles which split over the top are handmade of gay silk and satin and tinsel—very "French"!

To Buy or Make for Christmas

For Baby's Comfort

If baby could write, it is fair to suppose that Santa Claus would be deluged with letters saying: "Please, dear old Nick, bring me a nice little hot-water bottle to make me comfy." A miniature hot-water bottle in a be-flowered satin case is a cunning gift. It doubles the message of comfort if a bit of talcum powder be included. These nursery requisites are obtainable in matched sets, beautified with flower craft which creates such wonderfully lovely posies out of satin ribbon.

In Santa's Menagerie

What a din of "bow-wows" and "quack-quacks" there would be if all the animals and ducks and chickens and such in Santa's pack should start to talk at once. The called dog in this picture, with eyes painted so big and ears so long, is not half as ferocious as he looks. In fact, he makes friends not only with children, but the happer contingent, who doting on the sensational, call them "snuggle dogs," carrying them under their arm with true "beauty and the beast" effect. As to the other dog and duck, you can get them at almost any fancy work department stamped on pique ready to embroider. They launder perfectly.

Czechoslovakian Pottery

Much to the joy of the art connoisseur genuine Czechoslovakian pottery is finding its way (reasonably priced considering its beauty), into America's yuletide displays. This ware is actually handmade and hand-decorated in the very peasant homes. The highly colorful designs are the same as in vogue as far back as eleven hundred years ago. Anyone would be proud to receive a gift of pitcher (note its unique convex handle) and goblets to match like the one in the picture.

Of Gay Enamel Cloth

A cushion of colorful enamel cloth with bas-relief of realistic looking gay flowers is warranted to bring a real thrill on Christmas morn to the friend who enthuses on the subject of interior decoration, and who waxes eloquent over "a note of color" in the scheme of things. Do not confuse enamel cloth with glazed chints or cretonne or anything of that sort. It looks rather like colored patent leather and it is produced in every lovely shade, both pastel tints and exotic colorings, also black.

"The Great American Bird"

When the turkey gobbler's gobblin'
And a-struttin' 'crost the lot;
And the turkey hens are chatterin'
As they do the turkey trot;
When the gray clouds of November
Shut the sun out of the sky,
Then we can't help but remember
That Thansgivin' time is nigh.

Fodder haulin' is all finished
And corn pickin's almost done,
And we rush to get our work done
'Fore the settin' of the sun;
When we're settled down for winter
With the wood pile loomin' high,
And we hug the kitchen fire,
We sure know Thanksgivin's nigh.

Then a feller gets to thinkin'
How his season's work was done—
Of the hay and grain he gathered
Underneath a summer's sun;
And he sizes up his treasures
Names his blessings, one by one—
Crops in corn-cribs, bins and cellars—
Fine a family as anyone.

Then he 'most forgets the hardships
And the hard knocks he's passed through,
And, in spite of comin' winter,
He is glad, instead of blue;
And it doesn't seem to matter if
He's a dollar or a dime,
He just can't help a-feelin' thankful
At good old Thanksgivin' time.

—Dakota Farmer.

Day Tends to Foster Spirit of Kindliness

The day on which the nation is called to the giving of thanks is a home and family day, and as such is a valuable institution. Those who have no homes are often invited to become for the day members of families that are blessed with them. In a word, the home that is in all our thoughts today is the hospitable home. And that is well. There is great need in these times to develop and strengthen the family feeling, and to weld it more closely as a social unit. To the accomplishment of that work a properly observed and honored Thanksgiving day may powerfully contribute. To give thanks for what?—some may ask. But that is not at all the thought. What is important is that there should be in all a thankful spirit, a right attitude toward life, whether considered spiritually or materially, and a frame of mind that knows something of contentment and inward peace. There is much for which to be thankful if one only looks at life and its problems and difficulties—and blessings—in the right way. The day would remind us that kindliness is a great virtue and that the world would be happier if there were in it a good deal more of the spirit of friendliness—even among nations. —Indianapolis News.

Day to Reflect on Why to Be Thankful

It is one thing to be officially thankful and quite another to be actually and personally so. To accept Thanksgiving as an admittedly welcome holiday, to spend it at home enjoying a good dinner followed by a comfortable nap and then to go out for a call or two on friends is not enough. One might do this and still not be in the spirit of the day. As the greatest of the apostles has written, "the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life."

To be in the spirit of Thanksgiving is to reflect upon the reasons that one has for national, family and personal thankfulness. Maybe a glance at the pages of a school history of our country might help to quicken the pulse and brighten the eye. Possibly a steady gazing on the familiar features of Washington or Lincoln might be an aid to reflection. Perhaps a mingling with one's fellows in a congregation and the blending of a thousand voices in the strains of "America the Beautiful" might work wonders and be better for the heart than a physician's prescription.

Sentiment That Uplifts

Gratitude is one of the noblest sentiments which wells from the human heart. It purifies, uplifts and ennobles. It is an attribute of stability in character. A man may have many imperfections, but if he is capable of gratitude he is far from being all bad. And when gratitude is offered to the Most High, it brings the soul into tune with the Divine as scarcely anything else can.

What will we have for Thanksgiving dinner? A big turkey, Monarch Cranberry Sauce, Monarch Peas, mashed potatoes, Monarch Pumpkin Pie, and of course, the children will want their Monarch Cocoa.

EVERY genuine Monarch package bears the Lion Head, the oldest trademark in the United States covering a complete line of the world's finest food products—Coffee, Tea, Cocoa, Catsup, Pickles, Peanut Butter, Canned Fruits and Vegetables, and other superior table specialties.

Mechanical Painting

Painting mile-long cables suspended between steel towers and carrying electric power across a river near Tacoma, Wash., was a troublesome job until a new device was rigged up recently. Two semi-cylindrical wood blocks with brushes on their inner faces were clamped on each cable and paint fed into them from a fifteen-gallon tank on top. The device was moved the full length of each cable by a tiny car in which two men rode. It coasted downgrade and was pulled upgrade on the cable by a hand crank operating rubber rolls squeezing the wire.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backach and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating food which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you must relieve them like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of soft water.
